To Whom It May Concern:

This letter of recommendation is in regard to an exemplary employee, Patrick Lowenthal. Patrick worked for me for six years, both in the roles of Associate Director and Graduate Faculty for Instructional Technology and Distance Learning at Regis University in the Teacher Education Program. During the course of those years, I found Patrick to be extremely hard working, very bright and dedicated to his job. Patrick, as Associate Director, was responsible for coordinating and executing many activities of the Education program, including scheduling, hosting student seminars, coordinating schedules, and arranging staff development for our students and faculty. In the role of Graduate Faculty, Patrick advised students, coordinated our entire online program, wrote courses, and hired faculty to teach courses. Patrick himself was a frequent and popular instructor in the program.

Patrick reflects numerous qualities that any employer would appreciate having in an employee. He is punctual, personable, dedicated to the program, and works above and beyond to ensure the highest quality in the work he completes. Patrick is one of the most intelligent faculty members with whom I have ever worked and as a result, demonstrates strong, informed leadership skills. He is able to process large quantities of information and reach conclusions that are both accurate and innovative. Patrick has been a positive, powerful influence on our Assessment and Accreditation Team for several years, and we are very proud of the results of his leadership with the team. He has been instrumental in state and national accreditation reviews, and has numerous national publications and presentations to his name. On top of all that, Patrick has a great sense of humor and is very well liked by his colleagues.

Patrick recently moved to a position at the University of Colorado, and although we experienced his departure as a great loss, we are very pleased to see him advance in his career. We fully expect him to continue to grow as a leader in the field of education.

Most sincerely,

Suzanne Perry
